

ABSTRACT

A voice mail device includes a packet storing section which stores a received audio packet including audio data in a first encoding
5 format. Therefore, the received audio packet is stored as it is without undergoing any transcoding, so that it is possible to reduce a need for transcoding upon receipt of the audio packet, and as a result, reduce a need for an audio CODEC.